72. Inuit Soapstone Carving - Walking Bear

Description: How the carvings are made The Inuit artist first needs to gather their stone from the mine sites which are not located in the town. They sometimes need to travel the distance by boat in the summer or by skidoo in the winter. This stone is then hand cut with grinders and picks and hauled out piece by piece from the mine. This process can take several days. In most of these northern communities due to the harsh weather conditions, these mines are only accessible for a short period of time throughout the year. The carvers will then bring this stone back to their homes and often will carve at their own home in their carving sheds or outdoor. The artist will first spend time studying the stone in order to choose the perfect piece. They will "see" a figure within the stone, and use their axe to chip away the stone so that the animal or human figure can be "freed". Once the rough image is carved out, the artist will use a large file to go over the entire piece then work the carving again with a medium file and eventually with an even smaller file in order to work it down to finer details. The final step is to smooth the carving by placing it in a tub of water and then sanding it down over and over with finer and finer sand paper.

186. Smokey Joe Islay Single Malt, 700ml

Description: "Smokey Joe" Islay Malt Scotch Whisky is distilled on the island of Islay, off the south western coast of Scotland. Islay malts take their characteristics both from the local peat used to dry the barley and their closeness to the sea. These factors, typically, imbue the malts with a distinctive sea-weedy, phenolic and peaty flavour Smokey Joe is bottled at 46% ABV to enhance impact and flavour. The whiskey that makes up Smokey Joe has been selected for its highly engaging nose, balance of smoke and peppery spice on the plate and a lingering finish. 46% ABV Silver Medal - International Wine & Spirits Competition
